6. Best Practices and Success Stories

Over the past two years, Destination BC has sought out opportunities to improve service delivery and build relationships through understanding. Both Destination BC staff and over 80 Visitor Centre managers from across the province have now participated in Working Effectively with Indigenous Peoples, a daylong session to increase attendants' understanding of Indigenous history in Canada and assist with creating a better toolkit for building more productive relationships with Indigenous peoples.

In addition, some employees who participated in the K'tunaxa Nation branding initiative were able to apply learnings from this course in starting a conversation around working together to strengthen recognition of the K'tunaxa homelands and to introduce the nation's story to travellers and locals. In addition to a good group discussion about priorities and tangible actions, the collective desire in the room to understand the K'tunaxa goals and to contribute meaningfully to their progress was inspiring.
